
Estimated Cost of Adjusting Precinct Boundaries

Washington's county elections officials must adjust their precincts to conform to the new redistricting plan in preparation for the 2012 election cycle. A rough estimate of the cost to realign any split precincts, or create new precincts is shown for each county in included in this table. These costs are preliminary estimates based on assumptions made by county officials of the staff time and number of precincts they may need to adjust. The basis for these estimates was not the final redistricting plan, but an earlier set of proposals available to them. The final redistricting plan was carefully scrubbed for split precincts and misaligned geography prior to adoption by the Commission, and many adjustments were made to correct the final plan before its adoption. Further adjustments may still be needed, and may be made by the 2012 Legislature within their 30 day adjustment window. The actual number of adjustments needed, and the cost associated with those adjustments is not known at this time, however, the estimate included in this report likely represents the maximum cost to counties.
